This is a negative or hostile attitude, opinion, or feeling toward a person or group, formed without adequate knowledge, thought, or reason. This is based on prejudice and often leads to discrimination, actions that limit some person's or group's choices and opportunities. This is rooted in ignorance and a fear of differences. Since this is learned, it can be unlearned. With awareness, education, and action, it can be weeded out.

Officer Edward always tried to help people who were in need. One day he saw a small girl crying. "What's your problem?" he asked. "I've lost my money," she said. "Oh, dear!" Officer Edward said, "Don't worry. It's not the end of the world. Tell me how much money you lost." "Ten dollars," the small girl said. Officer Edward took out his wallet and gave ten dollars to the girl. "Here's ten dollars. Now you can stop crying," he said. But instead of stopping, the small girl cried even louder. "Now what's the matter?" Officer Edward said. "I wish I'd said I'd lost fifty dollars," the small girl replied.

handshake, gestures, tone of voice, and the like. We then use these impressions to fit the person into ready-made categories. And this early categorization, formed quickly and on the basis of minimal information, tends to hold greater weight than impressions and information received later. Why do we rely so heavily on first impressions? Basically, we _____, because we want to categorize them so that we can process and understand information about them quickly.

, to waste or destroy." Most of us don't think of ourselves as wasteful or destructive, but the world economy is based on consumerism. Today, people worldwide have greater access than ever before to a huge variety of products. What makes us decide to buy Brand A instead of Brand B, when the two items are really identical? Why do we buy things that we don't actually need? The answer lies in marketing. Successful marketers use their knowledge of psychology to _____.

With music, the rules are about sounds and rhythm. According to a study (C) done / doing in Germany, you use the same part of the brain for both subjects.

You can actually learn a lot of English words from reading English short stories. Just enjoy the stories and forget everything about learning grammar, sentence structures and vocabulary. If possible, just write down some words you want to learn, and look them up in a dictionary after you have finished one chapter. Then, try to put down the English meanings, part of speech and examples shown in the dictionary in your notebook, and try to use the words in your writing such as a diary or e-mails. This helps strengthen your memory of the words.

At around 10:30 p.m. last night, a fire broke out in a house at 413 Wilshire Boulevard. The house is in a very nice neighborhood, surrounded by beautiful trees. The family of four who live in the house were alerted by smoke alarms, and they all exited the house safely, although they must have been very frightened. Fire fighters arrived on the scene at around 10:45 p.m., and it took them over 3 hours to extinguish the blaze. The fire fighters were very courageous. The cause of the fire has not yet been determined, although faulty electric wiring is suspected.

a very early age. And for the most part, we have no problem telling the difference between the two. Yet sometimes the difference isn't altogether clear. Here's an example: If you were blindfolded and someone touched you first with a hot iron and then with a piece of dry ice, you probably wouldn't be able to tell hot from cold. This is a simple demonstration of a key fact. Physiological, or bodily response isn't a dependable method for measuring temperature.

In some cultures, an individual who could not pay a debt could be enslaved by the creditor. The second was crime. Instead of being killed, a murderer or thief might be enslaved by the family of the victim as compensation for their loss. The third was war and conquest. When one group of people conquered another, they often enslaved some of the vanquished. *vanquish: 정복하다

This is a true drama. A young woman and two friends flew from San Francisco to Death Valley. Flying in the mountains, the pilot chose the wrong pass, and the plane crashed into a mountain. All three survived but were badly injured. Shortly after, one friend disappeared down the steep slope. Night came, the temperature dropped, and the two survivors held on to each other for warmth. By morning, the woman was alone. At the edge of the mountain was a near vertical drop. She couldn't survive outside in the cold, so she attempted to climb down the wall of ice and rock. This book tells of the author's courage and how she endured against the odds.

This year in school I learned about the history of New England, a part of the United States. I decided to spend my summer vacation traveling around New England. I thought it would be a wonderful place to go on vacation. I believed I would enjoy seeing some of the places I learned about in school. In reality, however, I could not get enthusiastic about seeing the educational sights of New England. I wasn't sure if this was the place where I wanted to go on vacation. New England didn't seem all that great to me.

Young people have a hard time growing up. They begin to question the world around them and challenge their parents' authority. They want to experiment with life, change their appearance, and find out who they are. In this process of change, teenagers often rebel against their parents. Some even deliberately do the opposite of what their parents want. Some young people want to be different. They want to be seen as individuals and to stand out in a crowd. They worry about being popular and accepted. Young people can also feel isolated from their parents, adults, and society.

The Internet is the source of many rumors, or unverified stories. Rumors are generally spread from one person to another by word of mouth, and the story evolves or changes in the process. But the Internet has allowed rumors to spread much further and faster than ever before. In fact, the Internet has begun to be used as a deliberate strategy to circulate rumors, often for political purposes and often with a serious impact. In 1998, false reports of riots in Malaysia sparked panic that prompted people to stock up on food and lock themselves indoors.

Students seldom mention reading as a key to academic success. When you think of college, you think of attending classes and labs, completing assignments, studying for and taking exams, and writing papers. A closer look at these activities, however, reveals that reading is an important part of each one. Reading is not an obvious key to success because it is not evaluated directly. Grades are based on how well you express your ideas in papers and how well you do on exams. Yet reading is the primary means by which you acquire your ideas and gather information. Here are a few tips to get you started using reading to build academic success.

When my father was fifteen, he was up on a tree. Suddenly, he fell and broke his right arm below the elbow. Somebody sent for Mr. Wilkinson, who was the only doctor in town. But since he was out of town, his assistant Mike came at once. He mistook my father's broken elbow for a dislocated shoulder. "We will soon put this back into place," he said, trying to force the bones back into place. My father screamed. Later, Mike realized that he did something wrong. Although my father endured the terrible pain, too much damage had been done.

Maybe you've heard about some of these people. Men, women, and sometimes even children can become heroes. One thing these everyday heroes share with heroes like Hercules is bravery. These people may not fight monsters, but they do brave deeds like saving people from fires or drowning and helping when people are hurt. They help people when they need it the most, sometimes at great danger to themselves.
