OK. I'm off to the grocery store.
Sure. I usually walk to my office.

Woman:

Did you join any club yet?
I can't wait to go to the speech club.
Oh, that's for me! How do I sign up?
Really? When were you supposed to meet him?
You learn to become more confident in speaking.

Man:

I'm afraid I go swimming at seven.
Fine with me! I've got nothing to do.
Sorry, but I have some volunteer work to do.
In fact, I have a tennis lesson in the evening.
Well, if I can cancel my appointment with Cindy.

Woman:

Forget it. I went last week.
Thanks. I look forward to it.
Actually, I don't care for painting.
It's called "Who, What, and Why."
Never mind! She'll win next time.

Man:

I'm so glad you like it.
I cleaned the living room.
I don't like parties, either.

Patrick:

Thanks a lot for your company.
Wow! It smells good. What's in it?
It was great, but I got some mosquito bites.
Don't worry. I'll talk to my friends and call it off.
You mean the movie that has recently come out?

Although it is becoming rarer and rarer,
this is still one of the most delightful and effective means of communication.

It is usually required when someone has done you a personal favor. Rather like a flower, the longer it stands neglected, the less attractive it becomes. So remember, the most desirable one is a prompt one. A letter of this kind should be short and to the point. Personalize it, if possible, by referring to a favor, a gift, or just a memorable meal.

I left my hometown when I was very young, and now I live by myself in the city. Whenever I get lonely, I visit the park. The lilacs there remind me of my grandmother. Once, when I was eight years old, she took me to a lilac festival. It was a perfect outing. We walked together, holding hands, around the beautiful garden full of lilacs. After we went home, my grandma made me pumpkin pie, and let me put chocolate syrup on my ice cream. I can't remember another day as wonderful as that. Now, whenever the lilacs bloom in the park, I can almost feel my grandma beside me.

under when people smile on the telephone. Since the other person cannot see you smile, it seems pointless. But smiling is part of the conversational experience, and it is for this reason that cellular phone manufacturers are anxious to bring out models that allow you to see the person you are talking to. Soon more and more people will choose to communicate via such cellular phones. The problem with this choice is that we may Irish lost their entire potato crop to just one potato disease. Millions died of hunger; many more left the country and never returned.

But today the warning of the Irish example has been largely forgotten. Half the world eats a very narrow range of food crops. A single disease or insect might mean hunger again, this time for billions of people.

Since most of the manufacturing process was conducted by manual labor, the instruments were too expensive for the common people. With the evolution of mass production in the 19th century, musical instruments came to be affordable to the public at large. By the 1880s, nearly every middle class household could have at least one musical instrument in their home. Makers continued to produce hand-crafted instruments in the late 19th century, but their creations were far fewer in number than mass-produced instruments.

For example, the great forests that once covered Borneo are now nearly all cut down, and the forest people like the Penan have lost their homes forever. The Yamomami Indians of the Amazon, too, are facing a fight for their future. The fight for survival of these peoples may reflect the crisis of the human race. Lost wildlife, washing away of exposed land, and other disastrous environmental damage may soon wipe out the memory of short-term profits for wood and paper industries.

In just twenty years, the number of elementary school children will fall by half, to only two million. Worse, employees will be unable to find enough workers. Just to keep current numbers of employees, companies will need to bring in at least three million foreign workers. There are several reasons for this national crisis. Raising children has become very costly. It is hard to find adequate childcare. Many women choose to get jobs instead of raising children. Of course, having a baby is a personal choice. But government can make the choice easier by providing financial support and better childcare.

their children are played out. The impact of parents on relationships is likely to be most marked with younger children because of their greater dependence. Preschoolers may be almost totally dependent on their parents for opportunities to meet their peers. Parents who try to establish opportunities for peer contact for their young children are doing them a great service. These early foundations are an important base for the socialization of children into their peer group. Such children are likely to develop more consistent friendships outside of school.

Money which is used to make profits is called an investment. One common way of making investments is buying stocks. Companies need money to start doing business and to continue growing. This is why they are eager to issue and sell stocks. If the company is successful, the price of the stock goes up, and the person who invested in the stock may receive some of the profits. If it does, the person who invested in the company ends up losing money.

The car of the future is light, little and very easy to park. The car of the future is cheap, simple, and requires no fuel. Best of all, the car of the future is not in the future; it is with us right here and now. Bicycles provide consumers with all of these things. Why, then, are Korean commuters so dependent on the automobile? Well, for one thing, cyclists are afraid of motorists! In order to promote the use of the car of the future, our government needs to provide better bike paths, more bike lanes, and places to park bicycles.
