The damage it causes has been widespread in many parts of the world. It takes nutrients away from soils, slows the growth of trees, and makes lakes uninhabitable for fish. In cities, it rusts almost everything it touches. The problem begins with the pollutants from the burning of fossil fuels and from certain kinds of manufacturing. These pollutants react with water in the air and reach high into the atmosphere. They travel with the wind for hundreds of miles, and eventually return to the ground in the form of water.

Most parents would be surprised to learn this. They don't ever realize that this is happening. So why do they do it? Interestingly, it begins when the children are newborn babies. It is a known fact that at birth, males are a little less developed than females are. They don't make noises as much as girls do, and they don't have as much eye contact. Female babies make noises, look at their parents, and remain alert longer. The results? Parents respond by talking more to the baby girls, who seem to be paying attention and "talking" back to them.

Waiting for a bus at 9:00 p.m., I saw the bus approaching at a high speed. It was a brightly lit bus stop and I was sure the bus driver would have seen people there, if he had looked. I could see the bus driver looking straight ahead. He did not slow down and did not even look at the bus stop. He shot past as if he was racing to an emergency. I waved frantically and so did a few other passengers. As the bus sped past, we could see that it was almost empty. The next bus came at 9:30 p.m. and as a result, I arrived home very late.

As an admitting clerk at a hospital emergency room I determined that the pain in a young woman's wrists was caused by her work. Because of the pain, she couldn't write. So I filled in the necessary form for her. When we reached the date of injury, I said, "It may be somewhat difficult to tell the exact time of injury, but could we possibly fix a definite date?" "OK," she said after a moment, "how about the movies next Tuesday?"

23. One day a man saw his dog being attacked by another dog. He tried to separate the animals but was bitten by his own dog. The dog ran off in fright and did not return. After a few days, the man began to feel strangely nervous. He thought that his dog was mad, and he began to experience the symptoms of rabies. While the man was lying on what he thought was his deathbed, the dog returned – as healthy as ever. Within hours, the man was fully recovered. From this story, we can say that illness may be a product of _____.

24. Museums all over the United States keep great numbers of Native American human remains. For example, the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C. has about 18,500 human bones in its collection. Many Native Americans now want the museums to return the bones of their ancestors for reburial. They believe that when museum researchers study these bones, they disturb their ancestors' spirits. As long as the spirits are suffering, the living will suffer too. To Native Americans, digging, collecting, and studying ancient bones are acts of _____.

25. In recent years, the speed of travel has increased enormously. With the increased speed comes greatly increased danger. The driver of a powerful engine needs to be constantly alert. A moment of carelessness may cost a life. In order to drive today, a person must be able to see clearly and must learn and follow carefully the rules for safety on the road. Thus, _____ is the price we pay for using a machine instead of a horse.

26. Shock and fear can kill a bird. Birds sometimes fly into closed windows. They don't see the glass barrier that is between them and where they want to go. After they hit the glass, they fall to the ground. They are usually stunned or in shock. If someone who wants to help the bird picks it up, it might die. The shock from hitting the window combines with fear when it is picked up. The bird might react by getting so scared that it has a heart attack. So, people who want to help an injured bird .

27. A bloodhound started chasing a deer but a fox crossed his path, so he started chasing the fox instead. After a while, a rabbit crossed his path, so the hound chased the rabbit. Yet later, a mouse crossed his path and the hound chased the mouse into a hole. The hound, which had begun his hunt on the trail of a magnificent deer, ended up watching a mouse hole! Most of us will laugh at the bloodhound. But if we stop and think, we'll realize that often we too are easily distracted. It is so easy to start well but then run after things that cross our paths. Therefore, _____. [2

John Carter recently sued McDonald's after he was injured in a traffic accident with a customer of the restaurant chain. The customer, apparently, was drinking a chocolate milkshake and eating French fries at the time his car hit Carter's. Carter sued McDonald's because of the restaurant's failure to warn customers: don't eat while driving. But the court ruled in McDonald's favor. It was decided that McDonald's had no responsibility to warn customers about something so obvious. However, McDonald's still had to pay $10,000 for its defense. The case was in the court system for three years.

Insects don't grow on trees, but there is one that looks as though it could. It is called the leaf insect. This Asian bug looks just like a leaf. It belongs to the same insect family as the North American walking stick. The leaf insect is bright green and about three inches long. Its wings have veins like those in leaves. They look like thin, fan-shaped leaves. When it is sitting still on a branch, it looks just like a leaf. Its eggs even look like seeds. It feeds mostly at night. During the day it sits quietly among the leaves of a shrub.

33. Conflict means serious disagreement about something important. It is an unavoidable part in every person's life. Everyone deals with conflict in a more or less individual way. One way of dealing with conflict is to give in immediately to another's wishes in order to avoid an argument. Aggression is another way to deal with conflict. Those who favor aggressive behavior try to force other people to accept their own opinions. Conflict can also be dealt with through persuasion, or attempting to change another's behavior.

37. Look up into the sky on a clear night. If you are lucky, you might be able to spot many stars. Yet there are billions of stars in the heavens. Why can't you see the other stars? They are too faint to see without the help of a telescope. The brightness of a star is called its magnitude. The brighter a star, the lower its magnitude. The brightest stars are said to be of the first magnitude. First magnitude stars are 100 times as bright as sixth magnitude stars, which are the faintest. Any stars with a magnitude of more than six cannot be seen without the help of a telescope.

38. To many parents, the infant's crying may be mainly an irritation, especially if it continues for long periods. And most parents are concerned about crying. They think that it makes their infants' voice seriously hoarse. But crying actually is necessary for the infant and the parents. For the infant, crying helps to improve lung capacity and the breathing system. Perhaps more important, crying serves as a signal of distress. When infants cry, their crying indicates that they are hungry or in pain, and this is important information for their parents.

I came out of the house just as dawn was breaking. Rubble was all around me. The day before, there had been flower boxes and tidy stores and buildings—and now, nothing. Piles of silent bricks, glass everywhere, and pieces of broken walls that were jagged and smoking. The other thing I remember, besides the unbelievable destruction, was the sound—or lack of it.

The city was almost totally silent, particularly right at dawn. I found out the Germans had dropped 600 tons of bombs on London that night. □ rubble: 파편

This way of life, however, caused special problems for the tribes. They were forced to depend on luck, as well as on their skill. If they could find no game, the whole tribe was in danger of starving. And even when the hunters had good luck one day, they were not sure to find game the next time. The tribes moved often because much land was needed to support a few people. Thus, people had to roam many miles for food before they learned that they could grow their food.

At the age of 64, British novelist William Somerset Maugham decided that he had better write his autobiography, even though his health was still good. He did so and titled it The Summing Up. But why sum up your life at 64? "An occasional glance at the obituary columns," he explained, "suggests that the sixties can be very unhealthy." No matter how young or old we are, it's good once in a while to review our lives. Where have we been on our earthly journey? Have we been achieving our goals? Are we developing into the kind of people we aspire to be?

In the Arctic, fish and meat are the only foods available. Eskimos cannot raise fruit or vegetables. In the tropics, the plants supply much of the food people eat. American children drink milk from cows, but children of Bedouin herders in the Arabian desert drink milk from camels. In Tibet, milk comes from yaks, but in Lapland children grow strong on milk from reindeer. Indian herders in the Andes Mountains in South America give their children milk from llamas. In some parts of the world, children never see or taste milk.

45. With so many different brands of the same product, what causes us to choose one brand instead of another? Dr. Alan Hirsch ran a careful, well-organized study. There were two identical rooms with an identical pair of Nike sneakers in each room. There was only one difference: he sprayed one of the rooms with a scent of flowers. Volunteers entered each room and answered questions about the sneakers. The result was that 84 percent of the people preferred the sneakers in the room with the floral smell—even though they were exactly the same as the ones in the other room.

46. Pet owners often describe times when their pet showed feelings. A dog that hides under a bed during a thunderstorm shows fear. A puppy that jumps on a young child returning home from school shows joy. A dog that puts its tail between its legs as it is scolded shows shame. Then there is the tale of Bobby, a shaggy dog in Scotland. After Bobby's owner died, the dog watched the burial. Every night for the next 14 years, the dog went back to the graveyard and slept on his master's grave.

The guests were all seated. The parents of each family were escorted down the aisle and sat in the front row on their respective sides. A few minutes later, little twin brothers carrying flowers began their trip down the aisle. They were cute in their black tuxedo. They were just 3 years old and Mary's nephews. When they finished their walking, Jack and Mary finally appeared. Everyone stood up to applaud their union. Soon the minister in charge of the ceremony began to deliver his congratulatory speech.

(B)

The ceremony opened at 3:00 p.m. with a fanfare of trumpets. For two days, more than one hundred top surfers had tried their best to show their world-class talents. True to weather forecasts, the winds had been very strong and the waves had been very high during the competition. Brian Meyer, who had performed best, stepped on the platform and waved his hands to the crowd, who rose to their feet to congratulate him on winning the championship. Soon the band struck up the national anthem.

During World War II, the U.S. Marines had a difficult problem. They had to find a way to keep their communication secrets. Japan kept breaking the U.S. codes. They knew their enemy's plan, so they had time to prepare.

The Americans became desperate as the Japanese broke code after code. Then Philip Johnson went to the Marines. He had an idea. Johnson had grown up on a Navajo reservation. He knew the Navajo language, and he knew it was very hard to learn. Fewer than 30 non-Navajos knew it. None of them were Japanese. Johnson thought Navajo could work well as a code. However, the Marine officer was not sure about Johnson's idea. Even so, he agreed to give it a try. The Marines had to try something.

Johnson set up a test. He showed what could be done in 20 seconds. The Navajos could encode, transmit, and decode a three-line message. The officer was impressed. He brought in two code breakers. They didn't even know how to write down what they were hearing. Trying to translate it was impossible. The Navajo "code talkers" had a job. The officer ordered 200 Navajos to be trained for code-talking duty.
