18. 다음 글을 쓴 목적으로 가장 적절한 것은?

We are all very glad that the new train line has opened to take people to Euro-Disney. However, I must report that the trains are very crowded and uncomfortable. This is especially true at the busiest times when many people are trying to get to work. In order to attract more visitors to the park, we must put more trains in service during peak hours. There are also many tourists who do not speak French; therefore, we need train employees who speak English and other languages. If we do this, I'm sure more visitors will come to Euro-Disney in comfort and safety.

21. Even the happiest family will experience some trouble because disagreements will arise. Not everyone is going to agree on how the family resources should be spent. Not everyone is going to agree on places to go and things to do. The secret, however, is to keep talking about how one feels about a situation. If everyone talks about the situation, then each person can understand the other's view. By talking about other points of view, everyone has the opportunity to change his or her mind. Then _____ can return to the family. [2 점]

22. Ice sometimes can _____. Some growers actually spray their crops with water on a freezing night. Water freezes quickly on the plants — and then a strange thing happens. As long as ice stays wet, it cannot get colder than 0°C, a temperature many plants can stand. If the ice ever became entirely frozen and dry, it might drop many degrees lower, ruining the plants. But by continually spraying water on the ice, the growers keep it from going below 0°C, saving the plants. This strange kind of “ice blanket” works only on plants that are strong enough to stand the weight of frozen spray. [2 점]

By the end of the day, John has a number of customers who think their work is being done. But in reality, none of it is. Because of the interruptions, nothing has been completed. 24. All the forms of popular culture have one thing in common — the message that to be fashionable we must buy things. Every time something goes out of fashion and something new comes in, it is time to get out the credit card and check book. I know that my apple trees bend over the fence and seem to look down at your children with interest. And I also know that it is only natural that your children should return that interest by picking the apples that hang over your side of the fence. But, to be plain with you, I am tired of seeing your children, day after day, tear the branches off the side of every one of my apple trees, and leave my trees looking as though a battle had been fought on one side of them. I am even more tired of waking these fine autumn mornings to find even the apples on my side of the fence much decreased in number.

27. 밑줄 친 the witches 가 뜻하는 바로 가장 적절한 것은? [2 점]

Like many fairy stories, the tale of Rapunzel has a deeper meaning to it. It is a story about self-image. Rapunzel is a young lady who lives locked up in a castle imprisoned by an old witch who continually tells her how ugly she is. One day, a handsome prince passes by the tower and tells Rapunzel of her loveliness. She lets down her golden locks so he may climb her hair to rescue her. It is neither the castle nor the witch that has kept her a prisoner, but the belief in her own ugliness. When she recognizes her beauty, she sees that she can be set free. We all need to be aware of the witches inside ourselves that are stopping us from breaking free. *locks: 머리채

Several years ago we bought a huge house, more than 200 years old. In the house there was a room with a very old piano in it. It was out of tune. Most of the keys didn't even work. One night, I was in the house alone. Suddenly I heard piano music. It was in perfect tune, coming from the piano room. To get to the room, I had to go through several unlit rooms and hallways. I couldn't bring myself to do it. After a few minutes, the music stopped. Then my dad came home. We went to the room. I tried to play the piano — it was totally out of tune as it had always been.

When two people have troubles with each other, they often look to the law to decide who is right and who is wrong. Laws exist so that there are guidelines for behavior — what is the right thing to do and what is not right. Unfortunately, as lawyer Peter Smith says in his book, the two sides in a court case can never really win. The ones who “win” are the lawyers. Even when one person is the “winner” in a court case, that person must pay his or her lawyers, must pay court costs, and suffers from bad feelings — particularly the hostility of the other person in the case. So Peter Smith suggests another solution that can save you from wasting time and money.

A small piece of wood from a campfire flies onto some dry grass and goes unnoticed. Within the first few minutes this small fire may still be controllable, but in no time at all it's grown beyond the capability of the campers to put it out. It could take hundreds of fire fighters many days to extinguish this fire. This is exactly true of solving our everyday problems. What happens to a little problem that doesn't get resolved when it's little? It gets bigger and bigger until it becomes a real problem that's going to require a lot of time, energy, and resources to be solved.

35. While an email address may be complicated to remember at first, it's actually very simple when you break it down. There are three elements to an email address. The first is the username. This is the name that identifies the user of the email. The part of the email address after the @ symbol is called the domain name. It tells you who is providing the email service. The last part after the dot is the extension. It's a three-letter code that tells you something about the type of email service the user has.

36. The real danger starts when utterly unnecessary things become bargains. There are a huge number of people who just cannot resist bargains and sales. So long as they think they are getting a bargain, they will buy clothes they will never wear, furniture they have no space for. Old ladies will buy inline skates and non-smokers will buy pipe-cleaners. And I once heard of a man who bought an electric circular saw as a bargain and cut off two of his fingers the next day. But he had no regrets: the saw had been truly cheap. [2 점]

Tired of talking to my son about emptying his pockets before washday, I told him that all the money I found would not be returned. Instead, I'd put a jar in the laundry room, and when enough money had accumulated, he would have to take me out for dinner. The next washday, I handed him a laundry basket and asked him to gather up his clothes. I peeked in and was pleased to see him empty his pockets. But just as he was about to toss his dirty jeans in the basket, he paused, pulled out his wallet, and put a handful of change and a dollar bill into the pocket of the jeans.

Mae, a Chinese student, appeared in the dormitory room with a bruise on the face. She felt she was ignored because her American roommate didn't mention it at all. The wounded student thought that her silent roommate didn't notice or didn't care. But the American student was purposely not paying attention, thinking Mae might not want to talk about it. She let the Chinese friend decide whether or not to mention it. She was being considerate by not imposing, which was the American style. But Mae, based on the Chinese style, couldn't understand why her roommate didn't care.

According to a recent scientific study, geese fly in a "V" formation to conserve energy. ① This is the same principle that bicyclists use in the Tour De France. ② It's called "drafting" — the geese use the air currents created by the birds in front of them to fly more efficiently. ③ The number of geese is decreasing as the environment is polluted. ④ The aerodynamic "V" shape reduces the air resistance, which lets the geese fly much farther. ⑤ And since the bird at the front of the "V" encounters the most wind resistance, they all take turns at that position.

In Cairo, university students were given lower grades on papers if they used anything other than the proper British spelling of words. Today many teachers and professors in Egypt who spent time studying in the United States allow either spelling for a word like "centre/center." Thailand has experienced a similar situation. In schools and English newspapers in Thailand, British English is still considered the standard, but many teachers and professors who were trained in the United States speak with an American accent. 45. Success is the act of trying to improve upon the things you're already doing. It's growing and developing. It's accepting bigger and greater challenges. It's not being afraid of making a mistake, suffering a setback, or failing. It's trying to do your very best. And if, in the end, your very best wasn't quite good enough, you just have to go back to work and prepare a bit harder for the next time. Nobody succeeds 100 percent in anything they do. When you're able to recognize and accept this fact of life, you realize that failure and losing are as much a part of the game of life as are success and winning. [2 점]

46. When you're having a conversation with someone and he is angry, listen patiently. Once you get impatient and start arguing, your position hardens, the other person's position hardens, and it becomes impossible to find a mutually agreeable solution to the issues being discussed. So if you don't want to get into an argument, stay calm and say nothing, though you'll certainly be tempted to interrupt and respond to the person's statements. Within a few minutes the person will use up all of his anger and energy and talk himself out. Now that he has calmed down, you can have an intelligent conversation.

One day, Marsha went into the forest to pick some berries because she wanted to make a pie for her grandparents. She soon got lost, so she stopped at a house to ask for help. Unfortunately, a bear lived there. He made Marsha stay to clean and cook. Marsha wondered how she could escape.

(A)

The bear was amazed that Marsha could see him and never looked in the basket. When he arrived at her grandparents' house, some dogs ran out and chased him. The bear dropped the basket and ran away. Marsha jumped out and was free.

(B)

She had an idea. She made some pies and asked the bear to take them to her grandparents' house. "Don't look in the basket," she said. "Don't eat the pies on the way. I will climb the highest tree in the forest to make sure you don't eat them."

(C)

The bear hesitated but eventually agreed, thinking he would secretly eat the pies when he went into the forest. When the bear wasn't looking, Marsha hid in the basket. I hear the elephant eating fruit just outside the cottage. Gently pushing aside the mosquito net, I rise from the bed and walk quietly through the dark to the washroom, which has a tiny window. All I can see in the window is a large eye, like a whale's eye, blinking at me in the morning light. One step at a time, I move closer to the window until I am just below it. Then, standing on an old box, I pull myself up the window and see the elephant's eye only a foot away. Long, straight eyelashes partially cover his eye as he looks toward the ground searching for fruit. Then, as he picks up one with his long trunk and puts it into his mouth, he lifts his eyes and looks directly at me. He shows neither surprise nor concern, and I stare into the gray of an elephant's eye forever. This kind of thing may happen in other areas of Africa, but not in the Luangwa Valley of Zambia. In the last fifteen years, one hundred thousand elephants have been killed by illegal hunters in this valley. Here, elephants usually run at the first sight or smell of man. I want to always remember the deep wrinkles in the skin above the elephant's eyelashes, his wet and shining eyes, which now reflect the sunrise. Surely this will never happen to me again; the memory must last a lifetime. And I must never forget the way I feel, for at this moment I can see everything so clearly.
