Man:

You're right. Bowling is real fun.
I shouldn't try foreign food anymore.
I'm glad to hear that. Congratulations!
Why don't you get some rest at home?
Don't take it too seriously. It's just for fun.

Woman:

It's not your fault, is it?
You can do whatever you want.
Well, what are neighbors for?
Thanks, but I can do it myself.
Fantastic! It's a really good bargain.

Man:

Sure, but I have to go now.
You're right. Sorry to bother you.
Did I answer your question?
I usually watch TV all day long.
No, my watch doesn't keep good time.

David: Excuse me.

Is this seat taken?
Haven't we met before?
Do they show a movie on this flight?
Please help me with my hand-luggage.
You seem to be sitting in my seat.

They were born out of the habit of Korean housewives of making good use of small, otherwise useless, pieces of leftover cloth. They are easily folded and take up little space. So they have become a part of everyday Korean customs and practices. Although they were created for everyday use, they have added style to special occasions. A typical example of this is to wrap wedding gifts. They are also convenient and safe when used to carry things. Furthermore, they are more durable, economical and environment-friendly than paper or plastic bags.

Being the "brightest" member of my third grade class, I was asked to recite a rather lengthy poem for a school event. My initial response to the task was "No big deal," and I jumped at the opportunity to be in the spotlight yet again. I casually practiced my presentation at home. The day came. I began to recite the poem, but I suddenly lost my memory and could say only two lines

Volcanoes are very powerful in our minds because we are attracted by fire. Volcanoes are making a show each time we go there. It is a wonderful show of nature, the best we can imagine. When we are on volcanoes and they are erupting, we are just nothing. We have this big mountain exploding, all these powerful things

On the first day, I and a co-worker went into the store after work. Needless to say, everything looked good. The store was pretty well stocked. We both took mental notes of things we'd eventually get. We wisely decided not to buy anything on that day. We had plenty of time. We walked around leisurely, eyeing different items. I said to myself, "Here are some cheap computer games. That pair of roller blades for $25 looks good, too. That battery-powered electric shaver could sure come in handy." Yes, we were there to see the goods and to plan our purchases for the last day of the sale, when the prices would be really low.

Yesterday I ate lunch at your restaurant, which you advertised as "a dining paradise." It was so completely packed with people that the line snaked out the door, and by the time I reached the counter, I was exhausted. I decided on the hamburger steak special and side dishes, but there was no potato salad left and the beans were burnt more than baked. At the table, the truck driver as swamps and bogs, we are often reminded of unpleasant experiences: we get swamped with homework and bogged down in math being across from me wouldn't stop talking about highway taxes. Finally, when I rose to leave, the waiter "kindly" yelled at me to clean up after myself. Throwing away that plate of food was the most enjoyable part of dining at your restaurant.

The arctic tern is an extraordinary bird that makes difficult journeys. It flies up to 35,000 kilometers every year – all around the world from the North Pole to the South Pole and back again! That's more than any other animal. Arctic terns fly through all types of weather, using the sun and stars to help them. They spend almost all of their life in the air. When they need food, they catch fish from the sea. Some arctic terns live thirty years or more – so they travel over one million kilometers in their lifetime. The bird is only thirty-eight centimeters long and weighs around 300 grams.

Wetlands are important to many kinds of animals and plants that live there. Some birds nest in wetlands and others use them for rest stops during flights. Wetlands are important to people, too. People visit wetlands to fish, take pictures and just listen to the sounds and enjoy being outdoors. Wetlands also help us in other ways. They control flooding by soaking up water like a sponge and then letting it out later on. [1 점] lamps, security lights, searchlights, office lights and neon signs. In a natural night sky, someone looking at the heavens with the unaided eye should be able to see nearly 3,500 stars and planets and the glow from the Milky Way, our home galaxy. But in large cities, the number of visible stars has fallen to a few dozen. This stunning drop has made it impossible to grow up being exposed to the natural beauty and inspiration of the night sky.

Chef Walter Potenza owns three thriving Italian restaurants on Rhode Island. He believes that his success is the product of lifetime education. "When I opened my first restaurant, all of a sudden, my schooling and my knowledge came into play. It made me an academic, a person who explored the food business," Walter says. "And the learning never stops," he adds. "Every time you read a book, you get ideas. Then you introduce your ideas into your workplace. You make more work for yourself, but you make that work better. Chefs are made, not born."

Credit card misuse remains at an alarmingly high level. It is a cause not only of personal tragedies, but also of more serious social problems. But how can we deal with this situation? Whatever solution we choose, it must focus on changing consumers' spending habits for the better. Up to now, people have been encouraged to use credit cards for various reasons. This was good for those who used their cards wisely, but many have taken on large debts as a result. Now is the time, therefore, to emphasize sensible individual credit card use. Various financial support programs can be helpful in this, but unless consumers spend within their means, there can be no solution.

Every human being will grow older and die. Aging in itself is not a disease or a sickness, but as people age, disease often follows and the elderly need others' help. In addition, the percentage of senior citizens in the world has increased very quickly, and our society is no exception. The problem for us is that we have left the care of the elderly to their families. We must change our attitude toward this issue and develop more systematic social programs. The sooner we realize the importance of the role of government in this matter, the smaller the final cost to society as a whole will be.

This point can be explained using the following text, "Tommy had just been given a new set of blocks. He was opening the box when he saw his sister coming in." A computer would have no clue as to what is in the box, but we assume immediately that it contains Tommy's new blocks. We do so because we know that gifts often come in boxes and that opening the box is the natural thing to do. More important, we assume that the two sentences are connected, whereas the computer sees no reason to connect the box with the blocks. In other words, our interpretation of this simple text is based on common knowledge and expectations that are unavailable to the computer.

Traditional fairy tales show heroines who are usually beautiful and passive and spend a lot of their time indoors cooking and cleaning. Many authors today, however, are creating fairy stories in which the heroines are more active. For example, in Cinder Edna, a modern version of Cinderella by Ellen B. Jackson, the heroine wears comfortable shoes and takes the bus to the party. In Sleepless Beauty by Frances Minters, Beauty, instead of falling asleep, fools the wicked witch by setting an alarm clock. In other stories set in modern times, more and more strong, clever female characters are appearing.
